these messages in the grain. Indigenous cultures have legends that discuss what the message could mean, it could mean that we are evolving into a more spiritual being. The Mayans claim that the world changes in 2012. The world as we know it will end in 2012. Perhaps after 2012, we will be more on a spiritual level on a spiritual quest of transformation. The Aboriginal people have legends of 'dream time', when people could walk from this reality into other dimensions. It is claimed that this is a lost science. Perhaps we will regain this knowledge and learn to change the molecular structure of things, including ourselves. We will be on the next level of awareness, we are entering the time of Homo Superious. Perhaps the reason why crop circles are mostly seen in England, is because the Circle Gods want us to connect the dots, that ancient sites are connected to modern day crop circles. That our legends of fairy circles were also the enigma of what crop circles are today. On Milk Hill the Circle Gods left us a message in post-Augustan Latin and obscure Knights Templar based alphabet that read on this hillside..."I oppose acts of craft and cunning." Perhaps they were talking about our 2 guys that claimed to have made all of crop circles with sticks and rope. Or perhaps they are talking about mankind in general.

I believe the Circle Gods have been around since the age of mankind. Mankind may have recycled itself 5 times over and we are heading for the 6th level of change over. The reason why I say we may be recycling is from ancient transcripts. It appears that mankind was at a level of technology, that was as developed as our own technology and they may have even exceeded us with technology. In 200 AD, the Chinese had an earthquake detection device. 1040 AD the Chinese had a flame thrower. Batteries were discovered that were 2000 years old in Baghdad. In ancient Egyptian hieroglyphics, there are images of lightbulbs. The Ark of the Covenant seemed to be radioactive. When a slave touched the Arc, he died immediately. Perhaps this was radiation poisoning? Was the Arc a weapon of some sort and also a communication device to God? Chi-Kung of Chinese legend was known to travel the skies in an aerial carriage. King Solomon flew around Central Asia. The 4,700 year old Babylonian Epic of Etana describes flying into outerspace and looking back at the Earth. The description is accurate. Have you heard about the flying Vimanas of India? There were three type of flying Vimanas. There were: 1. the Vimana that could take you place to place, 2. flying Vimanas that took you from country to country, 3. flying Vimanas that took you from planet to planet. If ancient technology from India, Egypt, China, Atlantis, Lemuria/Mu existed, then what became of this advanced civilization? It appears that there may have been a nuclear war. Mu and Atlantis sunk into the ocean, Sodom and Gomorra was obliviated into nothingness and tektites - hardened glass is found in the Egyptian desert that may indicate a nuclear war of some sort. There are even vitrified forts in Scotland and Iran that seem to indicate the ancients were ready and prepared for nuclear war.

The world is in dire straights. With the threat of terrorism, crime, global warming, wars and the rumors of wars, new diseases arising, we are facing the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse. It is time for the Circle Gods to step in perhaps once again and set us on the right course towards elusive harmony and bliss, before we destroy ourselves. Since the Circle Gods know that we have a tendency of destroying ourselves when we reach that peak of technical perfection, it was easy to lay down the prophesy to the Mayans that the world as we know it will end in 2012.

COVER EXPLAINED:

Colonel Braytanium and the Green Gladiator examine and analyze a crop circle in England, near Stonehenge.

WHAT IS A CROP CIRCLE?

A crop circle is a large pattern created by flattening crops (like wheat or barley) to form geometric shapes. While often associated with the paranormal or extraterrestrial life, the majority are known to be man-made art forms created at night using simple tools like ropes and wooden planks.

Origins and Mystery

While patterns have been reported for centuries, the modern phenomenon surged in the late 1970s and 1980s, primarily concentrated in the countryside of southern England (such as Wiltshire and near Stonehenge). The designs range from simple circles to massive, highly complex mathematical and geometric mandalas.

Explanations

- Human Art: Many individuals and groups—such as the famous English duo "Doug and Dave"—have claimed credit for creating hundreds of these designs. Using basic equipment, groups can create vast and convincing patterns in a matter of hours.
- The Paranormal: Despite most being debunked as hoaxes, some researchers and enthusiasts point to features like bent stalks (rather than broken ones), microscopic metallic traces, and altered electromagnetic fields as evidence of an unexplained or otherworldly phenomenon.

THE CROP CIRCLE MYSTERY

Crop circles are geometric patterns that appear in fields of crops, usually wheat, barley, or canola. Over the years they have become associated with UFOs, paranormal phenomena, and artistic hoaxes. While some circles remain unexplained in terms of who made them, there is no scientific evidence that they are created by extraterrestrials or unknown natural forces.

Early reports

People sometimes claim crop circles date back hundreds of years, often citing the 1678 English pamphlet The Mowing-Devil. However, historians generally do not consider this a genuine crop circle account. The illustration depicts a devil mowing a field rather than mysterious flattened crops.

One of the first modern reports came in 1966 near Tully, where farmer George Pedley described seeing a saucer-like object rise from a swamp, leaving behind a circular area of flattened reeds. This became known as the "Tully Saucer Nest." Although often linked to crop circles, it occurred in reeds rather than cultivated grain.

The English crop circle wave

The phenomenon gained worldwide attention during the late 1970s and 1980s, especially in southern England.

The counties of:

- Wiltshire

- Hampshire

became famous for circles appearing overnight.

The earliest formations were usually:

- Simple circles
- Rings
- Small clusters

By the late 1980s, the designs became increasingly elaborate, including:

- Spirals
- Celtic-style knots
- Fractals
- Mathematical patterns
- Hundreds of circles connected together

Many of these formations appeared near prehistoric sites such as Stonehenge and Avebury, which fueled paranormal speculation.

The Doug and Dave confession

In 1991, two English men:

- Doug Bower
- Dave Chorley

announced they had created hundreds of crop circles beginning in the late 1970s using simple tools:

- Wooden planks
- Rope
- Hats fitted with wire for sighting straight lines

They demonstrated their techniques publicly, showing that surprisingly complex designs could be produced overnight.

Their confession convinced many investigators that at least a large percentage of crop circles were human-made.

Scientific investigations

Scientists have examined crop circles for decades.

Typical findings include:

- Crop stems are bent rather than broken when carefully flattened.
- Similar bending can occur from mechanical pressure.
- Soil chemistry generally appears normal.
- Claims of unusual radiation, magnetism, or microscopic changes have not been consistently reproduced under controlled conditions.

Some enthusiasts have reported:

- Electromagnetic anomalies
- Changes in seed germination
- Unusual insect behavior

However, these findings have generally not held up under independent scientific testing.

Why people think they're mysterious

Several factors contribute to their mystery:

- They often appear overnight.
- Some are extremely large—over 300 feet (90 meters) across.
- Intricate geometry can be difficult to appreciate from the ground.
- Anonymous artists rarely claim responsibility immediately.

Before drones became common, aerial photographs made the formations seem even more astonishing.

Crop circles as art

Today, many crop circles are regarded as a form of environmental or landscape art.

Artists often incorporate:

- Sacred geometry
- Mathematical constants
- Astronomy
- Optical illusions
- Cultural symbols

Some creators reveal themselves afterward, while others remain anonymous to preserve the mystery.

Paranormal theories

Despite the lack of scientific evidence, several ideas remain popular among enthusiasts:

- Alien spacecraft landing sites
- Plasma vortices
- Earth energy lines ("ley lines")
- Interdimensional beings
- Messages encoded in geometric patterns

None of these explanations has been verified through reproducible scientific evidence.

Crop circles today

Crop circles continue to appear each year, particularly in southern England, but also in countries including:

- Canada
- United States
- Germany
- Japan
- Brazil

Modern technology—including GPS, drones, and online communities—has made it easier for artists to create and document increasingly sophisticated formations.

Historical timeline

Year	Event
1678	The Mowing-Devil pamphlet (not generally accepted as a crop circle account)
1966	Tully "Saucer Nest" reported in Australia
Late 1970s	Modern crop circles begin appearing regularly in southern England
1980s	International media attention grows
1991	Doug Bower and Dave Chorley confess to creating many famous circles
1990s–present	Complex formations continue worldwide, with a mix of admitted hoaxes, anonymous artworks, and unexplained-attribution cases

The historical record supports the conclusion that many crop circles are deliberately created by people, and there is no accepted scientific evidence that any crop circle has a supernatural or extraterrestrial origin. At the same time, they remain a fascinating cultural phenomenon that blends art, folklore, mystery, and public curiosity.

Cadborosaurus is said by witnesses to resemble a serpent with vertical coils or humps in tandem behind the horse-like head and long neck, with a pr of small elevating front flippers, and either a pair of hind flippers, or a pair of large webbed hind flippers fused to form a large fan-like tail region that provides forward propulsion

Cryptid Name: Beast of Busco aka Oscar.

Location: Churuubusco, Indiana.

In 1898, a farmer named Oscar Fulk claimed to have seen a giant snapping turtle living in the seven-acre lake on his farm near Churu-co, Indiana. He told others about it, but eventually he decided to drop the matter. A half century later, in July 1948, two Churubusco citizens, Ora Blue and Charley Wilson, also reported seeing a huge turtle (weighing an estimated 500 pounds) while fishing on the same lake, which had come to be known as Fulk Lake.

Cryptid Name: Anguila Peluda aka The Hairy Eel. According to popular legends, it was a monstrous eel of great size that inhabited a pool at Punta de Anaga, and that terrified the local people. This legend ended up giving its name to the pool itself, the Charco de la Anguila in the Palmital Ravine, Canary Islands.

Cryptid Name: Bunyip aka Bahnyip. Location: Australia. The bunyip has been described as amphibious, almost entirely aquatic (there are no reports of the creature being sighted on land), inhabiting lakes, rivers, swamps, lagoons, billabongs, creeks, waterholes, sometimes “particular waterholes in the riverbeds”.

ABOUT FORT AUGUSTUS: Fort Augustus itself lacks mainstream, documented ghost stories of its own, the surrounding area is deeply steeped in local paranormal folklore and legends. The region's rich history, especially around Loch Ness, makes it a popular jumping-off point for visitors seeking haunted or mysterious Scottish sites.

Popular supernatural locations near the town include:

- Ardachie Lodge: Located near Fort Augustus, this historic spot was the subject of a classic 1970s Scottish television program, Leap in the Dark, which adapted chilling local stories and ghostly occurrences supposedly experienced at the lodge.
- Urquhart Castle: Located 30 minutes north of Fort Augustus on the banks of Loch Ness, this ruined 16th-century fortress is well-known for its turbulent history and legends of wandering spirits and apparitions.
- Loch Ness (The Legend): While not technically a traditional "ghost," the legend of the Loch Ness Monster is one of Scotland's most famous and enduring mysteries, with alleged sightings dating back to the 6th century.

HAUNTED TULLOCH CASTLE HOTEL IN DINGWALL, SCOTLAND
Tulloch Castle Hotel in Dingwall, Scotland, is widely considered one of the country's most actively haunted properties.Its long and turbulent history, including 12th-century origins, a time as a makeshift Dunkirk hospital, and secret passageways, has fueled numerous paranormal accounts. One of the most popular ghosts that hang out at Tulloch Castle is The Green Lady. The castle's most famous resident ghost is the Green Lady (believed to be Elizabeth Davidson), whose portrait hangs in the Great Hall. She is frequently sighted wandering the halls and stairwells.

Guests and ghost hunters have reported cold patches, unexplained orbs, and sudden drops in temperature. Then step in the spooky vibes of Room 8. Considered a hotspot for paranormal activity, the room has been the source of reports of figures at the foot of the bed, rattling door handles, and even feelings of a ghost pressing down on guests' chests.

HUMBERSTONE & SANTA LAURA SALTPETER WORKS
The Humberstone and Santa Laura Saltpeter Works in the Atacama Desert are widely considered "haunted". While there are no scientific or verified records of paranormal activity, they are literal ghost towns that possess a deeply eerie and atmospheric reputation. Local legends and ghost-hunting enthusiasts frequently point to the abandoned mining camps as hotspots for supernatural occurrences. Visitors and guides often recount stories of hearing footsteps, faint whispers, or the echoing sounds of heavy machinery operating at night when the towns are completely empty. Ghosthunters also hear the pounding of rocks. Ghosthunters says that the pounding of rocks originate with the Saltpeter Tommy Knockers. The area ws built by laborers (pampinos) in the 19th and early 20th centuries, the mines were known for brutal working conditions, exploitation, and tragic accidents. The sudden economic collapse during the Great Depression led to the towns slowly withering away until their final abandonment in 1961. Many locals believe the lingering trauma of the laborers who suffered and died in the desert has left a restless spiritual presence. The reputation of Humberstone is often linked to the nearby abandoned mining camp of La Noria. La Noria is the subject of more intense, localized ghost stories, including long-standing urban legends about apparitions roaming the old cemetery and streets.

LA NORIA ABANDONED MINING CAMP

La Noria, an abandoned 19th-century saltpeter mining camp in Chile's Atacama Desert, is widely considered one of the spookiest ghost towns in Latin America. It is infamous for its decrepit, open-air cemetery where shallow graves and exposed skeletal remains have fueled generations of paranormal legends. Following deadly epidemics and brutal working conditions in the 1800s, the town's hastily built cemetery was filled to capacity. Today, many graves and wooden coffins are left wide open, exposing the remains of past miners and slaves. Locals and visitors report seeing dark, full-body apparitions, shadow figures wandering the streets, and hearing phantom screams, footsteps, and disembodied voices echoing through the desert. Legend among locals claims that the restless dead rise from their open, desecrated graves to walk the deserted streets of the town at night. Situated just a few miles from its equally famous sister mining town of Humberstone, La Noria sits as a desolate, baked ruin. Because of the extreme heat, the exposed human remains, and the rugged, isolated nature of the desert, local neighboring towns in Chile consider the site highly dangerous and strongly advise against touring it without a guide. Explore its reputation as one of the creepiest spots in the region via Remezcla.

CHATEAU MIRANDA, BELGIUM

Château Miranda (also known as Château de Noisy) in Celles, Belgium, has a major reputation for being haunted. This sinister reputation stems from its dramatic history as a Nazi-occupied stronghold during World War II and its later use as a children's orphanage. Because of its decaying neo-Gothic architecture and troubled past, it became a hotspot for urban explorers and ghost hunters. While you won't find any verified paranormal activity, paranormal enthusiasts and dark-tourism fans were drawn to the location due to a few key factors. Let's take a nose-dive into those factors. Between 1950 and the late 1970s, the castle was used as a holiday camp and orphanage. The concept of abandoned, institutionalized children fueled local folklore and ghost stories. Another factor was that during the Battle of the Bulge, the property was occupied by Nazis. The castle was completely abandoned in 1991 and quickly fell into a state of severe disrepair. Its collapsed roofs, dark corridors, and overgrown grounds made it an ideal setting for real-life horror narratives. However, the haunting stories are now entirely part of history. Despite public protests and preservation initiatives, the site owners applied for a demolition permit, and the castle was completely torn down between October 2016 and 2017. Special Note: Even though the Chateau was destroyed, I would still love to investigate the land in which this Chateau stood. Not only was the Chateau haunted, but the property is haunted.

HELLTOWN, OHIO

Helltown (officially Boston Mills) in northern Summit County is not technically haunted, though it is Ohio's most famous urban legend. The "hauntings" are a collection of folklore stemming from the 1974 federal government seizure of the area for the Cuyahoga Valley National Park.The sudden displacement of residents left behind boarded-up, empty houses, which locals quickly filled with ghost stories. The persistent myths include a Satanic Church. The local Presbyterian church, sometimes rumored to host cult meetings, featured upside-down crosses. In reality, these were simply architectural flourishes. Another story is the "Crybaby" Bus. An abandoned school bus is rumored to hold the ghosts of children. It was actually the temporary home of a local family while their house was being repaired. Then it is said that Toxic Mutants roam around the town. A nearby abandoned dump (the Krejci Dump) leaked toxic chemicals, prompting government cleanup and birthing local myths of mutated humans and a giant "Peninsula Python" snake. Talking with a paranormal group called the OSO (Ohio Special Operations), they said the urban legends that you hear about Helltown were inspired by hillbilly horror movies like The Hills Have Eyes (1977); Wrong Turn (2003); Deliverance (1972) and The Texas Chainsaw Massacre (1974). OSO says that the urban legends of Helltown were also fueled by the true stories of mutant dogs living at Chernobyl. Stanford Road was rumored to look like it dropped off into a cliff, with legends stating the road would violently seize control of cars. While many of the abandoned structures have since been demolished by the National Park Service, the eerie history and lingering folklore makes the area a popular spot for ghost hunting enthusiasts.

From 1973 to 1976, my first enlistment in the US Army, I was stationed at Merrill Barracks in Nurnberg, Germany. I worked as a M.P. (Military Policeman) for a while. One day a special agent for CID (Criminal Investigation Division) - D.S.T. (Drug Suppression Team) named McFarland introduced himself to me. McFarland's code name was Big Mac. Big Mac liked my street wise smarts and the way I carried myself. Big Mac asked if I would work undercover narcotics. The perks of this job is that I could grow my hair long, I could grow a beard, I could wear civilian clothes all the time and get paid going to nightclubs looking for drug dealers. Also, CID would pay for my hotels, meals and allow me to travel throughout Germany on various cases, all paid by the Government, taxpayer's money. At the time the drugs that were being passed on from German nationals to G.I.s were LSD; black opium hash; tripping green hash; blonde Lebanese hash; brown bombers (a barbiturate); quaaludes; cocaine. Another problem in 1974 Germany is that the Khaki Mafia existed. The Khaki Mafia originated in Vietnam and was controlled by a dirty sergeant major and possibly a dirty colonel. The Khaki Mafia was involved in drug dealing, drug running, prostitution and black marketing. I agreed to take on the position and my code name was Porkchops. There was a time that Porkchops became very well known in one area of Germany and I had to call myself "Lambchops". Another place in Germany, I was very well known and my nickname changed quickly from Porkchops to Frisco. One day I asked Special Agent White why I received the code name Porkchops and SA White yelled out...."you're a fuxxing Puerto Rican right? They eat porkchops!" I said..."no, I am not Puerto Rican, I am part Mexican though!"

Some of the cases that I was involved in are listed below. Also, listed below are some of the misadventures.

Vomit Girl
In one of my cases, I went after a drug dealer that was selling heroin. I usually made 3 buys to solidify a case. I was going for my 2nd buy with this drug dealer and his strung out on heroin girlfriend sat in a chair in front of me and shot up some heroin in her arms. Then she looked at me and said it was hot in the apartment and started ripping off her clothes. Before I knew it, she was completely naked in front of me, nodding out. Then all of a sudden she vomited on her breasts and stomach. I almost vomited. I made my purchase of the heroin and got out of there. I was happy when I made the 3rd purchase and busted this guy for selling heroin.

The Jumper
During one of my cases, I was walking the streets, taking down license plate numbers of patrons of a bar that was well known for distributing narcotics. While taking down a license plate number, I heard a loud splat. I ran to where the noise was and saw a large woman laying in the sidewalk with a huge amount of blood pouring from her head, she had jumped from a 4th floor hotel room.

The Fake Police Dog
On another case, we were watching a drug deal that was going down in a parking lot and 3 MPIs (Military Police Investigators) that were working with the DST team, were sitting in trees and watching the drug deal with binoculars. Then the deal went down and an MPI we called Tiny (well, he wasn't Tiny, he was a 300 lb man, that stood at 6'4") and he started barking like a dog and another MPI was yelling....CID!!! The drug dealers thought the barking was real police dogs and instantly surrendered. One drug dealer yelled...."please I don't want to be bit! Call your dogs off of me!" The CID special agents laughed and told the drug dealer, there are no dogs here, that was Tiny pretending he was a dog!

Infiltrating a Unit
Many times, I had to infiltrate a unit and I would always dread this, because I would have to shave off my beard, cut my hair and wear an Army outfit. CID would give me a fake MOS, like a Battalion clerk or something. I would get fake Article 15s for not cutting my hair and the First Sergeant would yell at me for not cutting my hair and another fake Article 15 was given to me. The Battalion Captain would know that I was working undercover. I would make 3 buys from soldiers dealing narcotics in the Battalion and when I busted a whole lot of soldiers, CID would select a day to call out everyone in formation and then have me call out last names of soldiers I busted. A line of CID officers would then handcuff the soldiers and place them in the paddy wagon. The soldiers I busted would be shocked that I was an undercover narcotics agent, because they said I was so "cool".

Some of the Cities in Germany that I worked with CID
Nuremberg; Furth in Wald; Bamberg; Crailsheim; Bremerhaven; Munich; Berlin; Hamburg; Cologne; Frankfurt;Stuttgart; Dusseldorf; Mannheim; Heidelberg; Furth. Of course, there was many other places I visited in Germany. I took a cruise down the Rhine River and saw the Lorelei. I went to the Dragonfest in Furth-in-Wald and walked the Volksmarches, visited the Black Forest. Took a boat ride around Lake Constance. What is unique about that boat ride is that you go around the lake and you are in Germany, then Switzerland, then Austria and back in Germany again. You hit the borders of 3 countries by cruising around the entirety of the lake. Saw the Alps and while walking up the Alps, my hat flew off my head and floated to a nearby mountain. Visited Garmisch - Partenkirchen.

Disco
While going to nightclubs in Germany and searching for drug dealers, disco was a big thing in Germany. I watched the disco dancers dance and before I knew it, I had all of the disco steps down. When I had a 3 year break from the Army, I became the disco king of Sacramento, Ca.

Red of Crailsheim
While working undercover in Crailsheim, I was to seek out Red. A gorgeous German girl with flaming red hair. I found her at a nightclub. I had a cover story, I pretended to know her deceased husband. She was intrigued and invited me to her table. After talking with her for a while, we left in her Mercedes Benz, she had 2 African men bodyguards and they sat in front of the car, while one drove. Red and I, were in the back seat and the song..."Drifting on a Memory by the Isley Brothers" was playing. Everything became so surreal. I became entranced with Red and when we arrived at her mansion, we became intimate. In the morning Red was gone and her two bodyguards went through my trenchcoat and found my CID ID card. They said I need to be more careful and that they were going to let me go this time. Red was a drug runner that brought in narcotics from Amsterdam to Crailsheim. Red had told me that she would have taken care of me and I could live in her mansion, before she knew I was a narc.

Our Nicknames & the CID Bust:
My nickname was Porkchops. Other special agents were nicknamed: Big Mac; Taco; Savage; Michael "Fuggi" Fuginetti; Doctor Love; Fast Eddy Isenberg. During some point of time, some of the CID agents became dirty cops. One of those dirty cops was Fast Eddy Isenberg. The dirty cops were involved with prostitution, black marketing and some drug running. I notified officials in Washington D.C. and they flew in two internal affairs special agents to investigate the allegations. Some of the special agents lost their positions. Isenberg became a war museum tour guide.

Handing over my .45
One of the biggest mistakes I made was when I was in the back seat of a vehicle driven by two German girls. Both girls were drug dealers. They had an ounce of heroin hidden in a bush and they told me that if I handed over my .45, they would show me the ounce of heroin and of course I would be paying for it. I took out the bullets of my .45 and handed it over, they showed me where the ounce of heroin was hidden. I was wired up and gave the code words..."this is beautiful!" Out of nowhere agents were everywhere and the girl with my gun pointed my empty out .45 at Isenberg and Isenberg almost shot her and I yelled, the pistol is empty! Isenberg was so pissed, he slammed me into the car and yelled at me..."I almost shot her...why did you give her your gun?" I told Isenberg..."if I didn't, she wasn't going to show me where the dope was!" Isenberg slammed me into the car again. Lesson learned: You never hand over your gun to the bad guy. I had to testify against the two girls at the place where they had the WWII Nuremberg Trials (Trials against the Nazis).

Red all Over
On one night, an undercover MPI had blood all over him. He got jumped, because his face was burned (known). His identity was known by the drug dealers and they beat him to a pulp. I was so mad that happened, I went to the nightclub where he got jumped and paced outside of the front door staring at everyone, holding my .45. I finally calmed down and walked away from the nightclub, before anything could go down.

The Hole
Many of us undercover MPs stayed in what was called The Hole. It was the basement of the CID building. After we worked on our undercover assignments, we would go into the hole and have a few drinks and talk about our adventures and mis-adventures. We would bring in girls into the Hole to party with. Also, the mess hall for MPs, MPIs and CIDs were open all night and we would always have late night breakfast.

Ursula Thiess the Actress
While working undercover at the Holiday Club in Nuremberg, I was doing a bit of disco dancing. My dancing was so good, Ursula Thiess the actress who was sitting in the nightclub was impressed with my dancing, she sent over her manager to invite me to her table. Ursula bought me a drink and her manager was trying to explain to me who she was and how important she was. I was young and didn't get it. Finally Ursula left with her manager and that was the end of a possible friendship.

Miss Black America 1974
Another celebrity I met was Miss Black America 1974. She came to visit a unit that I infiltrated. I took a picture with Miss Black America 1974 and afterwards I got busy buying drugs off various soldiers in that unit. Many times I would have to testify at Article 32s and court martials in regard to the drug dealers I purchased drugs from.

The Khaki Mafia Never Came
I made a deal with a Khaki Mafia soldier that turned C.I. (Confidential Informant), he became my C.I. He set up a big deal with some Khaki Mafia head honchos and there was CID agents lined up and down the street waiting for the Khaki mafia car to meet me and the C.I. in my undercover car. The Khaki Mafia head honchos never showed up and we waited all day for them. The location was Bamberg. Later that night, I went to the Hit Club in Nuremberg and we made a purchase from two patrons and the Hit Club lived up to its name. One of the drug dealers hit Fast Eddy Isenberg over the head with a wooden cane.

The Bump Performed at German Carnivals
While working undercover at German carnivals, there would be a ride in which they played loud disco music. A bunch of us undercover agents would start line dancing (doing the hustle) outside and German photographers would take our pictures. Then the girls came and we all started doing the bump and the photographers went crazy taking pictures of us.

Trip to Italy - Free Train Ride to Nuremberg

On a major drug deal, I went to Bologna, Italy with a sergeant major, he drove us to Bologna. At Bologna I went to the Dome (club) and met up with two air force soldiers and worked their connections. No busts were made, but had a fun time partying with them. At the Dome Club, all of the Italian women would dance together on the dance floor and all of the men would stand on the outside. If an Italian girl liked you, she would tell you to come down to the dance floor and dance with her. So I stood on the outside of the dance floor and an Italian girl summoned me to the dance floor. I had such a good time in Bologna, I spent all of my money in Bologna and spent every dime I had. I had to get back to Nuremberg, so I hid in the bathroom on the train. I heard the ticket man knock on the bathroom door several times. When we arrived in Nuremberg, the German police (Kripo) and my fellow MPs were waiting for me. One of the MPs yelled and said..."Porkchops, why didn't you pay for your train ticket?" I yelled back..."I ran out of money and needed to get back to Nuremberg, I didn't want to be AWOL!" The MPs had a good laugh. I eventually had to pay the ticket for that train. The German Kripo cited me.

The Quarter Sized Hole Girl

While investigating a case in Hamburg, I met a German girl that provided me with information on various drug dealers. I liked her and we became intimate. I noticed there was a good chunk size hole in her buttocks. I asked her how she got that hole. She told me she was kidnapped by some Middle Eastern men and brought to the middle east to become a prostitute/sex slave. They kept her drugged at all times, but one time she was sort of straight in the head and tried to escape. They caught her and cut the chunk of tissue from her buttocks to teach her a lesson. Her father a former Nazi hired some mercenaries and the mercenaries went to the Middle East and bargained with her captors and managed to bring her safely back to Germany.

Undercover as a Pimp.

One day S.A. White gave me a book, it was called Iceberg Slim. S.A. White told me to read it, because I was going undercover as a pimp in Munich. My target was a pimp that was selling bad heroin that may have been responsible in the deaths of 13 soldiers. The heroin he was selling was laced with strychnine. My outfit was a black fur coat, black velvet jacket underneath with white furry collar, black platforms, velvet black fedora, black gloves. I was to play the role as a pimp and I had 2 undercover MP females dressed in scantily clad clothing, mini skirts, etc. As an undercover cop posing as a pimp, I went to the nightclubs the pimp frequented. He noticed me and we began talking. Before I knew it, we instantly became friends. I did a performance with him, with my 2 undercover MPs poising as prostitutes, by chasing them around my black Mercedes Benz (unmarked vehicle) with a clothes hanger yelling..."I don't care if it is cold out there, you make me sum money, let me check your purse!" I dumped one of the girl's purses on the ground and then chased them around my vehicle again holding a clothes hanger. One of the undercover MP girls whispers..."we're going to kill you, when we get back to the CID office!" The drama I created was actually very comical and the pimp that I was targeting had a good laugh. I managed to make 3 buys of heroin from the pimp and CID and German Kripo took him down. He was given a life sentence. CID was so happy that I took this pimp down, that they allowed me to take a needed vacation. I went back home to California and a girl that I was corresponding with name Cathy Orange invited me to her home. The only clothes I brought with me were the pimp clothes, that I thought was in fashion in California. When I ate dinner with Cathy and her parents, I was a strange sight to see and Cathy's parents couldn't stop staring at me. After dinner, Cathy sent me home and had nothing more to do with me, she was no longer infactuatuated with me and stopped writing me letters in Germany. I used the pimp clothes one more time, I wore the pimp clothes to the 4th Annual Hooker's Ball in San Francisco and a news agency filmed me dancing, they loved the outfit.

UnXNetwork does not want me to discuss my demon cases, they say it's too deep and they do not like to discuss religion. So, I will skip out of this paracon, in which they wanted me to speak.

THE DARK WATCHERS

When I was living in San Bruno, I would head over to Big Sur – San Gregorio Beach with my pals Eugene Pointer, Willie Reid, John Hester.

Willie Reid claimed he saw 2 Dark Watchers along a hillside. I didn't see them, but Willie was positive on what he saw. He saw 2 men, 10 feet tall, wearing very dark clothing and looking towards the ocean. Willie said they appeared and then vanished.

The Dark Watchers are tall, shadowy silhouettes reportedly seen standing on the remote ridges and peaks of California's central coast, particularly along the Santa Lucia Mountains in Big Sur. They typically appear at dusk or dawn, silently observing travelers before vanishing when approached.

The legend of these 10-to-15-foot-tall figures—known historically as Los Vigilantes Oscuros to Spanish settlers—is deeply rooted in California folklore. They are most commonly associated with specific locations:

- The Santa Lucia Mountains / Big Sur: The epicenter of the legend. Spanish explorers and Native American tribes documented them for centuries, and classic authors like John Steinbeck even wrote about them.
- Mount Mingus and Mount Graham: Sightings and cryptid lore occasionally place similar shadowy watchers atop these mountains in Arizona.

While the lore claims they are enigmatic spirits of the land, scientists often attribute the sightings to optical illusions like the Brocken spectre (where a hiker's shadow is cast upon mist and magnified) or the power of pareidolia.

NEXT: DIVA SPECIAL OPS discover The Dark Watchers. As I look at the picture, I see the Black Rose and the Rose Goddess. I am not familiar with the superhero lady in green. I was told she is the Lady Green Archer who is trying to become a Diva Special Ops (operative). She is also the sister of the Green Gladiator. Missing are: Cloud Enchantress and Shield Maiden. I did not know that Black Rose can sprout out angel wings. Learn something new every day. The Demon Warrior

Is Kefalonia, Greece Haunted?

Kefalonia isn't actively haunted by ghosts in the traditional sense, but it is famous for its eerie, abandoned "ghost villages." These deserted settlements—such as Old Farsa, Old Vlachata, and Old Valsamata—were decimated and abandoned after a catastrophic earthquake in 1953. Today, their decaying stone structures and creeping vegetation offer an atmospheric, haunting vibe.

While the island doesn't feature classic, paranormal lore or haunted mansions, wandering through these silent, overgrown ruins can definitely feel like a trip back in time. For travelers who enjoy off-the-beaten-path exploration, these abandoned towns provide a unique and slightly spooky contrast to the bustling, sun-soaked beaches of modern Kefalonia.

My sister lived on Santorini Island for 5 years. When she visited Kefalonia, she felt a presence and was curious if Kefalonia was haunted. It doesn't seem like it, but who knows? The only way to find out is to conduct a thorough paranormal investigation.

BELOW IS A BLAST FROM THE PAST
INTERVIEW WITH DONNA REYNOLDS - WITCH

The Demon Warrior interviews
Donna Reynolds - Witch

Subject: Interview with a Witch: The Donna Reynolds Story Sat Jan 26, 2008 2:57 pm QUOTE

I waited in an area that had a picnic bench with a clump of trees for my interview with a real witch. The area was somewhat remote, and I looked around and saw nothing around me. Then I heard some birds chirping and from a clearing at this park, a mysterious woman in black appeared out of nowhere and started walking towards me. She said..."hi, I'm Donna, I'm your witch." I looked at Donna and said.."step in my office and let's do this interview, have a seat." As I pointed at the park bench table. Donna relates to me that she has been interested in the Wiccan culture since the time she was in high school. Her screen name is a Gaelic name, it's Badb. Badb is named after the Celtic goddess Badb Catha, she may take on the name of Badb as her permanent craft name, but hasn't decided yet. The circle she belongs to is Sacred Fire Circle, which is having it's Sacramento Mabon Celebration 2007, it will be an open circle and everyone is invited. They will conduct a leaf burning ceremony, to release negativity into the atmosphere. Each member and guest will receive an acorn, which represents future harvests.

Donna's Encounter with the Thor: The Norse God of Thunder:
Donna tells me that she became a practicing witch in 2003, she has extensively studied the Wiccan culture and embraced it full heartedly. She will never forget the time, that she was with a group of Wiccans and they were singing chant songs to the God Thor. The Lady of the Circle named Belisama Fire lead the group into chant. The more they chanted, the night became stormy. The presence of Thor was felt and all of a sudden, it started to rain in buckets, the heavy winds blew wildly and the tarp that gave them shelter blew to the ground. When the chanting resided, everything went back to normal. They later learned that there was no other storm anywhere else, the storm only hit the location of where the Circle was at.

Donna Joins HPI:
Donna has recently joined H.P.I. (Haunted and Paranormal Investigations) of Northern California, as a Paranormal Investigator and went on their 2007 Haunted Placerville Tour (haunting investigation). When going on this tour, Donna was surprised to feel a wall of energy at one of the locations she visited on this tour. But, this is not the first time Donna has dealt with the paranormal, she has been plagued by the paranormal since the age of 16. When Donna first contacted me, to write her story (an occurrence that happened in the Fall of 1972 in Niceville, Florida), she sent me this in her own words:

"I lived in a double-wide mobile home for four years with my parents in a mobile home park on Eglin Air Force Base near the Gulf Coast of Florida when I was in high school. At that time, if the military member was sent overseas for a short tour, the family had to move off-base until the member's return.
When my father received orders for a one-year stint in Thailand in the early 1970's, we moved the mobile home to Niceville, a small town near the base. My parents bought an unimproved lot and had trees taken down, electricity put in, a septic tank installed, and whatever else needed to improve this piece of property. Within a very few weeks, my father was off to Thailand and my mother and I lived in the mobile home alone.
I was in Georgia on a high school band trip when my parents made the actual move. I got home around 10:00 PM a couple of days later. My room was not set up yet, so my mother got me a pillow and blanket and set me up on the couch in the living room. That night, my first night in this home, my sleep was disturbed my multiple noises - mostly knocking on the wall and the sound of footsteps. I'd been in a similar situation when I was very young, and for some reason did not feel afraid. I just said out loud, "Please let me go to sleep!" and the noises stopped.

The next day I was in the backyard exploring. I have always loved nature and became interested in a line of ants traveling across the yard. I found their nest and squatted on my haunches to look at them. I suddenly felt a hand on my back and was pushed forward to the point where I had to put my hands out in front of me to catch myself from falling on my face. I told my parents about it and they just laughed at me. Nothing else happened for several weeks, except once when I was pushed again, this time in my bedroom while my father was putting some shelves together for me. When I was pushed, I nearly fell on top of him.
For the year and a half that my mother and I lived in the home, there were many incidents where we heard knocking on the walls, footsteps, sobbing (from my room), bad smells like something had died, light fixtures coming on by themselves when they weren't plugged in, a fire-ant invasion in my mother's toilet, shadows in the window, a blob of gray mist hanging beneath the ceiling, the sound of water dripping (the drops sounded like they were falling from a height not possible where the sound was coming from), light switch sounds but no lights going on or off, my name being called, cold spots, a feeling of not being alone - and even a full-figure apparition on one occasion of a very petite or young female with a long dress and lots of hair piled up on her head - much like the ladies wore in the Civil War era. These events became more and more frequent as time went on.
We also had other family members that visited during this time and they, too, had experiences. The interesting fact about all of this, is that none of them, including my father, shared their experiences with my mother or me for fear of scaring us. My uncle and my grandfather visited together once, and didn't share their experiences with either of us or each other. It was only years later that my family, including my father shared their experiences with my mother and I. We were all in awe of the fact that we had all had separate experiences that were collaborated years after the fact.
We eventually sold the place because my father received orders for Travis AFB near Fairfield, CA. We had no idea about any problems at the site since then. We know that the mobile home we put there is gone and there is another in its place. That's the extent of my knowledge of these experiences at the time of this writing.
The only information I have to offer right now is that Niceville, FL, was at one time a very small fishing village. The lot we lived on was very near the water. We can only surmise that at one time there either was a settlement of some sort or maybe a homestead on or near the property my parents bought.

Below are added comments from Donna, as she relates to experiences she had in her present home in Rancho Cordova:

"Once, while I was home alone I was sitting in the den watching TV when I heard my name called. I was sitting on a couch that was in front of a large window, and the voice sounded like it came from outside, through the window behind me. I couldn't tell if it was male or female because it was almost a whisper, but not quite. It just said, "Donna".
Another time, my mother, a family friend name Eunice, her two teenage children, Sue and Jim, my friend from next door, Debbie, and I were all sitting outside in the backyard having a good time. Sue, Debbie, and I decided to go next door to Debbie’s house for a while. Debbie and I walked around the back end of the house, through the front yard, out the gate at the front (hitch) end and to the road. At the road we had to double back the other direction as Debbie’s house was next to the back end of mine, causing us to travel the length of the front of my house toward hers. In the meantime, Sue went inside through the back door near the end of the house to use the bathroom. I go into such detail to illustrate the time it took for us to make the trip vs. the time it took Sue to reach the bathroom. It was starting to get dark and the lights were on in the living room and the curtains were drawn. When Debbie and I reached the road we both, for some reason, looked toward the house and we both saw a shadow of a male figure in the curtains of the living room window. As we watched, the figure moved out of the window, in the direction of the back of the house where the back door and bathroom were. We both ran to her house and told her mother what we had just witnessed. As we were finishing our story, Sue came in looking very white. She said that while she was in the bathroom, she heard footsteps coming from the living room area of the house and walking toward the back. Time-wise, it was exactly at the same time that Debbie and I saw the shadow.

Once, coincidentally while I was living at that home, my boyfriend and I had just returned from a date and were standing in the driveway when we both saw what we thought was a UFO. It was a reddish light that just stood very still in the night sky and finally just vanished after a few minutes. Also, one dark, moonless night my mother and I were driving south on Sunrise Blvd. here in Rancho, somewhere between the American River and Folsom Blvd. when we saw some kind of ship fly toward us from our right. It made a large sweep over us and turned back in the direction from which it came, and flew off. It was huge and the lights were in an elongated triangle pattern. It did have blinking lights but was either too large or too close to be an airplane - it was too dark to tell. If I were to hold my hands out at arms length to describe how much windshield space it took up, I would have to hold my hands about three feet apart!"

Donna believes she is an empath and her whole family is a magnet for the supernatural. From the time she was 16 and up to the age of 17, she lived in a mobile home in Niceville. She experienced ghostly encounters, as mentioned above in her blurb. I discuss what she wrote to me about her experiences and ask Donna was there anything else that was unusual. She said, one day her dad walked into a room and it was filled with smoke. Her dad thought it was a fire and when he looked again, the smoke was gone. On another night, family and friends felt an icy cold presence move through the home. Donna's ex-boyfriend on another night noticed the flashlight dimming on its own, then the lights in the home came on for no apparent reason. Donna always felt presences at this home and she wonders if the small fishing village that once was on this property had anything to do with the presences of this home.

Donna goes on to tell me that 2/3rds of her life has been experiences of the paranormal. She has seen ghost animals, a luring ghost cat. She once saw a ghostly hand move the shower curtain. She has seen 'shadow people' move about the house. Once while laying in bed, she felt someone sitting on the bed and it caused an indentation on the bed. All through her life from her grandmother's home in Pocahontas, Virginia to the Mobile Home in Niceville, Florida to Castle AFB (at this AFB housing community, she witnessed the animal spirits, the entity that sat on her bed and the shadow people) to her present home in Rancho Cordova where there are at times poundings on her walls. Donna feels that her family attract entities from the other side and her connection to the Wiccan culture goes back as far as to her grandmother, who was known as "Grannie".

Perhaps entities that dwell in the realm of the supernatural are attracted to Earth people known as Wiccans, because Wiccans embrace nature and respect the Earth. The Earth and nature is filled with energy and the harmonious nature of energy embraces the Wiccan culture and brings on energy entities to watch over them and to protect them. Donna is a unique young lady and she is filled with stories of her encounters with the supernatural. So many stories, that it would fill a good size book. I am honored to write a small piece of her life, because I have met a woman who is one with nature. As she departed into the surrounding area of trees, I felt a small gentle breeze go with her.
